Abstract. The distribution and ecology of forty hypogeous fungi from Sicily (southern Italy) is described. Hysterangium stoloniferum, Protoglossum aromaticum, Sclerogaster compactus and Tuber maculatum are reported as new records from Sicily. Gymnomyces xanthosporus and Melanogaster umbrinigleba are also new for Italy.

Key words: distribution, ecology, hypogeous fungi, Sicily

Introduction

The ecology and distribution of forty-nine hypogeous and semi-hypogeous fungi, growing in different Sicilian forest ecosystems, was previously studied by Venturella et al. (2004a, b, 2006). Further investigation in different natural and artificial woods of Sicily were carried out in the last two years. The up-to-date number of hypogeous and semi-hypogeous fungi of Sicily, considering the previous number of taxa reported plus the new additions reported here, currently corresponds to fifty-four taxa.

Materials and Methods

A number of different forest ecosystems, located at different altitudinal levels, were investigated in Sicily during the period February 2006 – December 2007. The identification of hypogeous fungi was carried out on fresh ascocarps and basidiomata, and the microscopic features were observed in an aqueous solution with a DMLB Leica microscope. The scientific binomials and trinomials of recorded taxa were according to the monograph of Montecchi & Sarasini (2000) up-to-date according to Index Fungorum (www.indexfungorum.org). The date and localities of collection, the cartographic references, the habitats and the altitudes of each taxa were listed in the paragraph of data recorded and included in this paper. The distributive data were referred to the grid map 1:50,000 of the Official Map of the Italian State (I.G.M.I.), following the methodology proposed by Padovan (1994). The herbarium specimens are kept in the Herbarium Mediterraneum (PAL).

Results

In the framework of a broad census of the fungal diversity of Sicily, the recent availability of dogs trained in the search of hypogeous fungi allowed us to acquire an enhanced data base of information on the diversity of such interesting group.

The data reported in this paper contributed to provide some additional information on the ecology and distribution of forty taxa, some of them recorded for the first time in Italy and/or in Sicily. In particular these data showed that the most representative families (Fig. 1) are Tuberaceae (10 taxa) and Strophariaceae (8 taxa) and the high level of diversity (Fig. 2) arise from oak woods (28 taxa) followed by re-forestation (20 taxa), hazel-tree cultivation (16 taxa), mixed woods with prevalence of conifers (14 taxa), and beech woods (11 taxa). Gymnomyces xanthosporus and Melanogaster umbrinigleba are new records for Italy, besides Hysterangium stoloniferum, Protoglossum aromaticum, Sclerogaster compactus and Tuber maculatum are new reports for the Sicilian territory.

On the basis of data reported in previous publications (Venturella et al. 2004a, 2004b, 2006) and the new records reported in this paper the total number of hypogeous and semi-hypogeous fungi from Sicily currently stands at fifty-eight taxa (twenty-five ascomycetes, thirty-two basidiomycetes and one zygomycete) belonging to twenty-two genera included in eighteen families.
